Border patrol academy length

When the crisis on the U.S.-Mexico border peaked in April, Business Insider senior video writer Graeme Flanagan spent four days at the U.S. Border Patrol Academy in Artesia, New Mexico, about 200 miles north of the U.S.-Mexico border. Border Patrol is at the center of an in-depth examination of the polluted conditions experienced by thousands of migrants in its detention facilities. Homeland Security's watchdog warned earlier this month of filthy, overcrowded conditions at several Texas Border Patrol facilities where immigrants and older children walk without hot food and showers. Acting DHS Secretary Kevin McAleenan defended the conditions at detention facilities as humane, calling the reports horrific conditions unverified, but acknowledging the particularly challenging situation. President Donald Trump's forsification of illegal immigration has led to a rapid shift in the role of the Border Patrol: from traditional law enforcement roles to arresting, processing and caring for immigrant families and their children. Business Insider was looking into whether the agency had renewed its recruit training program, against the backdrop of an unprecedented wave of Central American families crossing the Southwest border. Read more: We spent a day with the U.S. Border Patrol in El Paso, where the agency is swamped by the scale of migrants crossing the U.S.-Mexico border during our four days there, I haven't seen a specific instruction at the academy to prepare trainees to work in detention centers or treat migrants, other than an extensive Spanish language course. It reflects a new reality for an agency that reaches breaking point: Its academy does not train Border Patrol agents for the role the White House is asking them to do. In a statement, a spokesman for U.S. Customs and Border Protection said, the Border Patrol Academy does not conduct training related to officer-arrest duties... Once graduating students arrive at their station, depending on their geographic location, it now becomes the duty and responsibility of their station to continue training the new agent on local policies and procedures. Entering the Border Patrol Academy The Border Patrol Academy is one of the toughest law enforcement academies in the country. The 3,000-acre property and dozens of recruits endure six months of basic training to become Border Patrol agents. Each year, about 1,000 apprentices graduate from the academy. Most are in the rocky and sometimes strident terrain of the southwestern border. Read more: Disturbing images show dangerous overcrowding at immigrant detention facilities in Texas Academy training begins at a time of what instructors call sturdy tension in which fresh recruits from the bus cry out to bolster their decision-making abilities under pressure. From day one, our goal is to make sure they're ready to deal with anything they might encounter on the ground, no matter what the obstacle. About them, says Border Patrol Academy Commander Dan M. Harris, Junior Border Patrol Chief Daniel Harris talking to new Recruits Business Insider curriculum amounting to 940 hours of strict physical fitness provision, immigration law, firearm use, and driving, among other areas. The meetings include simulations in which Border Patrol instructors prepare a variety of possible scenarios in real life, including stopping armed drug smugglers or arresting people who crossed the border illegally. Apprentices spend the largest part of their curriculum learning Spanish to better prepare them to communicate with the people they meet in the field. But it represents less than 20% of their total training, most of which are wasted learning different techniques for law enforcement. Business Insider has seen no training at the academy specifically designed to prepare trainees to work in detention centres or care for migrant children, other than Spanish language training. Shayanne Gal/Business Insider When asked if there were any future plans to adjust the training based on reports from the detention centers, a CBP spokesperson did not comment directly. The academy's law enforcement training includes first aid and basic life-saving measures, a CBP spokesman said. It also recently implemented a program called Emergency Medical Decision Scenario, or MEDS, in which agents are trained to assess the basic health of detained immigrants and prevent deaths while in federal custody. The academy's curriculum was last updated in late 2017. It was extended from three months to six to strengthen agent training, especially how to work safely in a dangerous environment and keep professional composure in distress. Practicing at the Border Patrol Academy is being simulationd. Business Insider but the curriculum's added focus on navigating life-threatening situations doesn't take into account the evolving nature of an agent's day-to-day work. When we spoke to the then CBP commissioner, John Sanders, in April, he told us that around 40% of the agents' time is about duties other than law enforcement. Sanders resigned in July.The widespread challenges facing the Border Patrol twiled in 1924, the Border Patrol made up of 19,000 agents, more than half of them Hispanic. But it still has more than 2,000 fewer agents than the congressional mandate level of 21,370 - even as Trump signed an executive order in January 2017 to hire 5,000 Border Patrol agents to tighten illegal immigration. Xi'an Gal/Business Insider Additionally, only 5% of the Border Patrol workforce is women, the largest gender gap in any federal government agency. The agency's longtime issues in training and retaining its employees have also been twitching on allegations over the past decade about certain agents' ties to drug cartels, misuse of immigrant detainees and cross-border shootings. Despite the widespread challenges of the Border Patrol, it also served as the life blood of many borders Seen as a source of jobs with good wages and benefits. The starting salary for a Border Patrol agent with no prior military or law enforcement experience is $41,987. A Border Patrol academy recruit. Business Insider Harris, head of the academy, says he hopes a Border Patrol career will instill fake values within agents in office and sacrifice. I want them to look back and know, 'Every day I was willing to risk my life for this country, and I served admirably, and I made a difference defending America,' Harris said. These ambitions, however, are being tested for the combat agency. On the first day of Grade 1120 training camp, Harris spoke to a room full of recruits to emphasize the need to exercise their authority responsibly - which he noted, including arresting people and lethal use of force when necessary. If you bring inplevance to the U.S. Border Patrol, if you bring in lewdness to the uniform you're wearing, I'll fire you. Is that understood? Said the head of the academy. The campers responded: Yes sir! Then Harris continued to wish green-clad recruits good luck. × CSS Customs and Border Protection (CBP) is the federal law enforcement agency responsible for providing border security to the nation.
